

Mary Ann Johnson, PhD, is the Bill and June Flatt Professor of Foods and Nutrition and Faculty of Gerontology in the Department of Foods and Nutrition, College of Family and Consumer Sciences at the University of Georgia. She received her doctorate in Nutritional Sciences from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. Dr. Johnson is well-known for translating scientific information about nutrition and health into practical advice for older adults and the agencies that serve them. Dr. Johnson works with local, state, national, and international organizations to improve the health and well-being of older adults through evidence-based health, nutrition, and physical activity programs. Her expertise in human aging is in longevity, health promotion, nutrition, vitamins, minerals, dietary supplements, and diabetes prevention and management. Dr. Johnson's research and outreach programs have been funded by NIH, USDA, state and local government, and other organizations. She is a co-developer of Live Well Age Well, which is a website developed for older people and their families and caregivers (www.livewellagewell.info). She is a contributor to Nutrition Reviews, serves on the editorial board of Journal of Nutrition for the Elderly, and is a member of the American Society for Nutrition, American Dietetic Association, Society for Nutrition Education, Gerontological Society of America, and Institute of Food Technologists. Dr. Johnson's recent awards include the 2007 Georgia Diabetes Coalition Research Award, the 2008 College of Family and Consumer Sciences Outreach Award, and the first Bill and June Flatt Professorship at the University of Georgia.
